Ephesus Was The Gateway Of Asia And It Is Now One Of The Seven Wonders Of The Ancient World.

Ephesus was the Gateway of Asia from Europe. Main difference was that when the Roman proconsul came as governor of Asia, he must disembark at Ephesus and enter his province there. All the trade, from the Cayster and the Maeander Valleys, from Galatia, from the Euphrates and from Mesopotamia, Ephesus was the highway to Rome.

In later times, when the People were brought from Asia to be flung to the lions in the arena in Rome, Ignatius called Ephesus the Highway of the Martyrs. Ephesus was the chief commercial city of the province and the center of the mother goddess worship of western Asia. In the New Testament era it was the fourth greatest city in the world, after Rome, Alexandria and Antioch of Syria. Pergamum was the capital of the province of Asia in Roman times, but Ephesus was the biggest city in the province, with more than 250.000 population. Ephesus is now located about five to seven miles inland from the Aegean Sea in the Cayster River valley. The harbor, which frequently silted up, made Ephesus the most favorable seaport in the province of Asia. Three great roads converged on Ephesus. One brought the east trade by way of Colosse and Laodicea. The road from Galatia came via Sardis and brought the trade of Asia Minor.

The third important road was to the north. If you plan to visit this ancient city found in Turkey. There are many sites to see in Ephesus today. The Harbor, Arcadian Way (Harbor Street), the reign of Trajan, Library of Celsus, Curetes Street, Temple of Hadrian, The Odeion and The Temple of Artemis that made Ephesus as one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World. This temple was the first to be constructed entirely of marble. After years of archeological research the ruins of the temple were discovered in 1877 by J. T. Wood. The platform on which the temple stood was 418 by 239 feet, and the temple was 342 by 163 feet and had over one hundred columns supporting its roof.
